Overview:

This course will examine the social aspects of phonetic variation, focusing particularly on the relationship between method and theory. Students will be introduced to the field through a survey of contemporary research from variationist sociolinguistics, linguistic anthropology, experimental phonetics and laboratory phonology. Basic methods for studying the production of different types of phonetic variables including vowels, consonants, tones, voice quality/phonation, and prosody, etc. will be introduced to give students the foundational tools for conducting sociophonetic work. How both sounds and speakers are perceived, and the implications of both inter- and intraspeaker sociophonetic variation for theories of sociolinguistics and phonetics/phonology will also be discussed.

Students will be assessed by 3 essays (2000 words each) summarizing and critically evaluating research articles read in class, 1 in-class presentation of an article of choice and by a research project proposal of the students' design at the end of the semester.

Prerequisite: LIN 3010

Objectives: By the end of this course, students should:

- Be able to examine phonetic variation/change using techniques and theories from sociolinguistics, linguistic anthropology, experimental phonetics and laboratory phonology.
- Be able to apply acoustic analysis techniques to investigate phonetic variation/change.
- Be able to design a research project on phonetic variation/change suitable for a senior thesis (for under graduate students) or academic conference (for graduate students).

Students are allowed to record video or audio of class lectures. However, the purposes for which these recordings may be used are strictly controlled. The only allowable purposes are (1) for personal educational use, (2) in connection with a complaint to the university, or (3) as evidence in, or in preparation for, a criminal or civil proceeding. All other purposes are prohibited. Specifically, students may not publish recorded lectures without the written consent of the instructor.

A “class lecture” is an educational presentation intended to inform or teach enrolled students about a particular subject, including any instructor-led discussions that form part of the presentation, and delivered by any instructor hired or appointed by the University, or by a guest instructor, as part of a University of Florida course. A class lecture does not include lab sessions, student presentations, clinical presentations such as patient history, academic exercises involving solely student participation, assessments (quizzes, tests, exams), field trips, private conversations between students in the class or between a student and the faculty or lecturer during a class session.

Publication without permission of the instructor is prohibited. To “publish” means to share, transmit, circulate, distribute, or provide access to a recording, regardless of format or medium, to another person (or persons), including but not limited to another student within the same class section. Additionally, a recording, or transcript of a recording, is considered published if it is posted on or uploaded to, in whole or in part, any media platform, including but not limited to social media, book, magazine, newspaper, leaflet, or third party note/tutoring services. A student who publishes a recording without written consent may be subject to a civil cause of action instituted by a person injured by the publication and/or discipline under UF Regulation 4.040 Student Honor Code and Student Conduct Code.
